NEWS TO TRAVEL BY

Essential Philadelphia

It's finally spring, and we're basking in nature's beauty. Part of doing so means digging in at any of the city's fine restaurants, many of which reap the bounty of nearby farms. Raise a glass to Earth Day (April 22) with some of our favorites, where sustainability is always the daily special (see page 12). This season also appeals to the city's innate independent spirit. That vibe manifests today in shops, cafes and yoga studios channeling inner wild childs (see page 10). But if you have only limited time, we can help. This month, check out one of the city's best hubs for art.

90 MINUTES IN: The Barnes Foundation

This world-class art museum has been around for some time, but it's been in its current location on the Benjamin Franklin Parkway only since 2012. That year, the collection moved from its longtime home in Merion, Pennsylvania, where founder Dr. Albert Barnes lived with his wife.

The museum now sits in a 4.5-acre park-like setting anchored by a 40-foot abstract sculpture by Ellsworth Kelly and a main build ing that's LEED Platinum-certified, the first major arts and education center in the U.S. to receive the designation. One of its main features is the use of natural light, which casts the galleries throughout in a warm glow while reducing electricity use.

Though the outside is stunning, the inside is just as impressive. After all, the trove is one of the best in the country, with icons including

Cezanne, Matisse, Picasso,

Modigliani and Renoir well represented. Indeed, the Barnes claims the largest single holding of Renoir in the world. As such, works by those masters shouldn't be missed. But visitors should also be sure to check out works by Horace Pippin. A self-taught African-American painter born in West Chester, Pennsylvania, he used his left arm to guide his injured right arm in carving images onto wood and then applying paint to works depicting intimate scenes from his childhood. About 140 of Pippin's works exist, four of which are housed here.

Dr. Barnes also kept an influential array of African sculpture and Native American crafts, rounding out this intriguing collection. For details, see page 22.

Bohemian Rhapsody

While the City of Brotherly Love is certainly home to mainstream chains and big box outposts, its independent spirit can be found thriving in every neighborhood. (Let's call it the same spirit that was sparked during the American Revolution and endures today.) Take a break from life's hectic pace and explore Philly's most free-spirited shops, cafes, yoga studios and gardens.

MAGIC GARDENS

What began as artist Isaiah Zagar's mission to beautify his neighborhood is now one of Philly's most beloved art installations. Every inch of the space shimmers with brightly hued mosaics incorporating both tiles and found objects like mirrors, glass bottles and even bicycle wheels. In warmer months, the afterhours Garden Sips offers drinks, music and retro crafts. 1020 South St., 215.733.0390, phillymagicgardens.org

CHHAYA CAFE

Fittingly, this haven is named for the Sanskrit word meaning "shelter from the sun." The chill program with fair trade and organic beans by locals like Philly Fair Trade Roasters and Reanimator. Teas and specialty drinks round out the offerings. Try the Heaven Sent Elixir—a soul-soothing blend of honey, ginger, black peppercorn and lemon, which chef/owner Varnana "V" Beuria says was inspired by the concoction her father made whenever she was feeling under the weather. 1819 E. On the Whole

The way chef/owner Marcie Turney of Barbuzzo and Jamonera (110 & 105 S. 13th St., 215.546.9300) sees it, making use of the whole animal is the ultimate show of eco-respect a chef (or meat eater) can show. That's why she regularly breaks down 200-pound Lancaster farm-raised hogs for her restaurants' Spanish-accented charcuterie, sofrito and ragu. In nearby New Jersey, Cherry Hill's The Farm and the Fisherman Tayern (1442 Marleton Pike East, 856,356,2282), chef Joshua Lawler insists on sustainably sourced meat, fish and poultry, sourced from farms in Lancaster County. Traditional whole-animal butchery is happening in the kitchen at BYOB Russet (1521 Spruce St., 215.546.1521), under the informed knives of chef/owners Andrew and Kristin Wood. Charcuterie (above) is a house specialty. While the menu changes daily, when available, try the house-cured coppa with blood orange chili oil or bacon-stuffed prime beef flank.

Gardens of Dining Delights

Beyond a patio or sidewalk table, having a meal in a garden takes alfresco dining to new heights.

TALULA'S GARDEN

he joy of grazing in a garden nas inspired poets and romantics for centuries. Both are welcome at Talula's Garden, where proprietor Aimee Olexy's farm-to-table sensibilities play out against a backdrop of tangled lush greenery and cultured herbs. In the outdoor lounge, ambient heaters take away the occasional chill, while plates overflowing with artisanal cheese and mushroom pâté en croûte warm the soul. 210 W. GO VEG! GO GREEN!

Meatless Wonders

These days, going veg is all the rage. Thankfully, plantbased restaurants are sprouting up all around town. Perhaps no spot has done more to put vegan on the map in Philly than stylish Vedge (1221 Locust St., 215.320.7500). Here, chef/owner Rich Landau's deft touch is evident in something as simple as a radish, treated five different ways. Diners also can't go wrong with anything from the menu's "dirt list," consisting of dishes with ingredients likely harvested within 24 hours of plating. If a veggie pizza doesn't quite satisfy, how about a seitan cheesesteak or tofu "mozzarella" pie? Both and so much more are on the menu at Blackbird (614 N. 2nd St., 267.324.5224), Philly's first (and only) all-vegan pizzeria. Blackbird also satisfies sweet cravings with desserts from Vegan Treats. P.S. & Co. (1706 Locust St., 215.985.1706) in Rittenhouse Square serves up an extensive, eclectic menu of vegan dishes (Mohinga soup anyone?), plus organic and raw juices and smoothies in a Pinterest-worthy spot.

To Market, To Market

Why go to a farmers' market when you can't bring the produce home to your own fridge? Let us count the ways! Chief among them: fabulous food. Soak up the local color at these favorites.

- Feast with your eyes and absorb the colorful tableau of local gastronomic commerce at historic Reading Terminal Market, Your appetite will soon emerge, and vendors of everything from homemade sausages to airy pastry step up to fill the void. Aisles of produce, meat and seafood purveyors are bracketed by every manner of deliciousness, from hearty cheesesteaks to sushi rolls and Italian roast pork. 12th and Arch streets, 215,574,0929. www.readingterminalmarket.org
- The Italian Market in South Philly is a moveable feast, vibrant with hawkers' cries and the smell of espresso. Vendors sell produce daily along the sidewalks, but the shops lining Ninth Street deal in prepared fare. Have a roast pork sandwich at George's, salumi and cheese at Claudio's or Di Bruno Bros., and a Mascarponefilled cannoli at Isgro Pastic-

· As you walk the city, you might see weekly markets in parks and squares around town. Many of these markets are operated by The Food Trust, a local nonprofit that works to provide access to affordable, nutritious food and runs more than 30 area farmers markets, including such yearround Saturday gatherings as the Clark Park Farmers' Market, at 43rd Street and Baltimore Avenue in University City, and the Fitler Square Market, at 23rd and Pine streets. www.foodtrustmarkets.org

A SPOT OF GREEN

East Passyunk Avenue in South Philly is a "crooked corridor" and burgeoning restaurant row—the diagonal artery is home to some of the most buzzed about restaurants, including those helmed by James Beard Award nominees. Tucked along the busy street, Green Aisle Grocery (1618 East Passyunk Ave., 215.465.1411) is a local gem worth seeking out. The teeny shop, run by brothers Adam and Andrew Erace, is chockfull of farm-grown produce and locally made gifts to take home. Among the goodies you might find? Hummus from chef Michael Solomonov's modern Israeli Zahav restaurant, glutenfree cinnamon-raisin loaf from Amaranth Bakery, and housemade preserves and pickles like brandied pears with cardamom from the store's private label.

Philadelphia Your Way

FIND THE CITY CURATED FOR YOU AT WHERETRAVELER.COM/PHILADELPHIA.

This year, Eagles fans certainly got something to celebrate with a historic Super Bowl win for the city. But, anyone who loves sports can find plenty to toast here. In Collingswood, New Jersey, (1) DePace Sports Museum offers a loving tribute to all genres with tons of artifacts, including the trunks Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier wore during the 1971 "Fight of the Century." If Philly teams are your thing, however, head to (2) Shibe Vintage Sports, a local institution stocking a deep collection of clothing and gear recalling bygone years with old-school designs. (3) Fox & Hound, one of the city's liveliest sports bars, appeals to both game watchers and non-watchers. Settle in during any local and major sporting event for specials on the tavern's robust beer list and a formidable menu of bar grub favorites.

Rittenhouse Row is home to some of Philly's most luxurious shopping destinations, but right in the center is a green refuge known as (1) Rittenhouse Square Park. Take a break from shopping and enjoy a tranquil picnic on the well-manicured grass after picking up lunch from nearby Di Bruno Brothers. Sitting pretty in the Chestnut Hill neighborhood of Philadelphia, (2) Morris Arboretum is a public garden and historic site wrapped into one. In addition to the 92 acres of flowers, trees and plants, the arboretum also offers classes, tours and lectures for plant lovers. Snap the perfect picture of the Ben Franklin Bridge from (3) Race Street Pier, a waterfront spot at the banks of the city. On any given day, you'll find runners, sunbathers, passing duck boats and an overall feeling of calmness.

Nothing says "time for a break" guite like ice cream. (1) The Franklin Fountain is an old-fashioned soda parlor that fits well with Philly's history-focused tours. We suggest ordering the Mt. Vesuvius mixed with a brownie, hot fudge, malt powder and whipped cream (yum!). When you get to the (2) Adventure Aquarium, head straight for the Shark Realm, an exhibition space offering 360-degree views of the ocean's most feared creature. Remember your visit long after you leave by "adopting" a marine animal, which comes with a certificate, a photo and a plush toy. (3) One Liberty Observation Deck offers one of the best ways to take in the city, especially if you're short on time. The touchscreen boards enhance the experience, but the views truly take your breath away.

Philadelphia - where modern luxury meets historic elegance. From our exquisitely preserved 18th century brick row-houses, to the luxury amenities offered in the newest modern high-rises, discover what it's like to LIVE in Philadelphia.
