But it's not all about savory dishes; desserts get attention, too. In this issue, we survey some of the most tempting and, dare we say, addictive (hello, Milk Bar's crack pie). We also take a day trip out to the country, specifically Middleburg, Virginia, where I spent a good part of my horse-obsessed youth. You, too, can hop in the saddle, and don't forget to visit some of the acclaimed local vineyards. Cheers to fall!

7ulie Kent

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR, THE WASHINGTON BALLET

"My hopes for TWB include building an international reputation of excellence."

Q: As you start your second season with TWB, can you tell us a bit about the direction in which you're taking the company?

A: My hopes for TWB include expanding the repertoire, incorporating live musical accompaniment to all of our performances (a given in any great ballet company), maintaining dedication to arts education through our renowned school and building a national and international reputation of excellence that we should expect in our capital city.

Q: What's the best part about your job?

A: There are many great rewards, but for me, at the top is watching the dancers fulfill and surpass their potential and experience moments in the studio and on the stage that will impact the rest of their lives.

Q: Do you have any preperformance rituals you do with the company?

A: Nope. Early in my career I thought it unwise to start any pre-performance ritual that I didn't think I could sustain for many years. (I was right!)

Q: When you and your husband [associate artistic director Victor Barbeel want a special night out in D.C., where do you go?

A: Honestly, we love to stay at home. (Victor is a great cook!) So dinner almost always includes our children. But Fiola Mare and Fig & Olive are chic, elegant and delicious.

Q: When you travel, what's the first thing you do at vour destination?

A: The answer depends on the reason for the travel. For work, the first thing is finding a water source. (Is tap ok? Or is bottled water needed?)

Q: If you could wake up anywhere tomorrow, where would that be?

A: A peaceful place with food, shelter and my family.

Discovering neighborhoods through their dishes

INSPIRED BY MEMORABLE MEALS on their world travels, Mary Collins and Stefan Woehlke (above) founded Carpe DC Food Tours, which take small groups through Washington's foodie epicenters, such as Shaw and 14th Street. Woehlke hopes participants "have fun, are entertained and learn something new," he says. And, of course, get their fill of local fare. The duo's newest zone of exploration is actually D.C.'s oldest. The Georgetown ramble reveals a rich past, from the colonial days as a major port for tea and tobacco to the mid-20th century's gentrification. (Fun fact: Busy Wisconsin Avenue was once a Native American trail.) Stops include both historic sites—churches, the 1865 market building, a house where JFK lived—and indie eateries like Patisserie Poupon (more at right). The community-minded pair donates a portion of ticket proceeds to local charity. See carpedcfoodtours.com.

With cupcakes, pastries, doughnuts, ice cream and gelato at every turn, D.C.'s digging dessert. By Amy Alipio

I MAY NOT BE SCREAMING for ice cream, but I'm definitely panting heavily for it. That's because Ice Cream Jubilee, the homegrown parlor that hit the D.C. frozentreats scene like a 10-ton Good Humor truck, is a brisk 17-minute walk from my office. By the time I arrive at its sunny store in the buzzing 14th Street neighborhood, I'm a bit out of breath.

But I'm quickly revived by a scoop of Fresh Minty Chip. Its leafy taste surprises me, a pleasant reminder that mint is actually an herb, not a flavoring out of a bottle.

I didn't really need to walk that far to get my sugar fix. As local food critic Nevin Martell says, "It's hard to go a block in D.C. without coming across a bakery, a pastry shop, an ice cream stand or a candy store."

The nation's capital has a serious sweet tooth. How serious? One of the most famous, and long-running, reality TV shows set here follows two sisters who make cupcakes. Even the thriving local salad franchise—salad!—nods to D.C.'s favorite taste in its name: Sweetgreen.

As Washington's food scene has exploded in the past few years, the dessert landscape has also grown, with local start-ups and outposts of nationally known spots. It doesn't hurt that D.C. is full of young, foodobsessed professionals who fill Instagram feeds with posts tagged #dessertporn.

Whether you're a doughnut devotee or a fudge fanatic, you'll find a variety of places to satisfy your cravings. Georgetown is a good neighborhood in which to start. Here, in 2008, sisters Katherine Kallinis Berman and Sophie Kallinis LaMontagne opened Georgetown Cupcake. The queue started almost immediately—and hasn't let up since, partly due to the success of their reality TV show on TLC, "DC Cupcakes."

As Washington's food scene has exploded in the past few years, the dessert landscape has also grown, with local start-ups and outposts of nationally known spots.

Martell prefers the cupcakes at Baked and Wired nearby. "They're more substantial and inventive," he says. "Plus the place has a super funky vibe. Not the kind of place you expect to find in Georgetown."

Ladurée, on the other hand, is exactly the type of place you'd expect to find in the tony neighborhood. An offshoot of the fancy French patisserie chain, this elegant tea room sells macarons in a rainbow of flavors, including pistachio, rose petal and coffee, illuminated by the soft light from crystal chandeliers.

Downtown at CityCenterDC, Christina Tosi has opened a branch of Milk Bar, her popular New York bakery that introduced the addictive Crack Pie to the world. But Tosi grew up in the D.C. area, which has inspired her latest line of goodies. "My fondest memories of eating out were weekly family splurges at Baskin Robbins or Dairy Queen if my older sister and I were on our best behavior," Tosi tells me. "Recently we rolled out our MilkQuakes, a soft-serve ice cream mash-up with Milk Bar mix-ins—think cookies, pies and cake—my homage to the frozen treats of my childhood!"

With seven shops, including one in CityCenterDC, Dolcezza has made creamy gelato pretty much ubiquitous throughout Washington. Even visiting celebrities can't miss it. "When Cate Blanchett and Hugo Weaving sat in our Dupont Circle shop eating gelato and drinking coffee, I was waiting for Frodo to come walking through the door!" says co-founder Violeta Edelman.

And where does she go to feed her own sugar need? "My husband and I love the black & white shake at Good Stuff Eatery, and my kids love everything Tiffany makes at Buttercream Bake Shop."

Tiffany would be award-winning pastry chef Tiffany MacIsaac, whose shop in the Shaw neighborhood serves scones, (almost) too-beautiful-to-eat cakes and her original takes on s'mores and Ho Hos.

For fried treats, I head to Astro Doughnuts & Fried Chicken near Metro Center, which has the former in flavors like PB&J and crème brûlée. And near the White House, contemporary French-American restaurant Mirabelle boasts pastry chef Aggie Chin and her exquisite creations, such as a black forest cake with Kirsch panna cotta and cherry lambic sorbet.

Don't worry if you need to head outside district lines: It's hardly a dessert desert. In Alexandria, Fleurir creates gem-like chocolates, and Sugar Shack sells delightful doughnuts, including the Girl Scout—worthy Tastes Like a Samoa. In Pentagon City, Sugar Factory is home to the Kardashian-approved Couture Pops. Bellagio Patisserie, at MGM National Harbor resort, features a 12-foot-tall chocolate fountain.

Having a diverse population also means that D.C. enjoys international indulgences, from Chinese egg custard tarts to Filipino halo-halo (shaved ice layered with fruit and ice cream) and Portuguese malasadas. This makes it difficult to pin down a quintessential Washington sweet.

But Victoria Lai, founder of Ice Cream Jubilee, does note that "one of our very popular flavors is Marionberry. We always get asked if this is named after Marion Barry, the former mayor. It's actually made with marionberries from Oregon. But I love that it makes people laugh, and we can share a bit of D.C. history through an ice cream moment!"

I end my treat-fueled tour near where I started. Next door to Ice Cream Jubilee lies a hip little Cuban café called Colada Shop. I pick up a tres leches cake and an iced café con leche. The barista asks if I would like the drink "Miami sweet" or half sweet.

I'm confused by the question. Why would anyone want it half sweet? "Most people order it [that way]," she confides. Apparently, even for Washingtonians, there's occasionally such a thing as too sweet.

MY NEW FRIEND ODIN IS SHORTER than he appears online, and his two-tone Mohawk is even punkier than I'd expected. No, Odin isn't my date from iCupid; he's the Norwegian fjord horse I'm sitting on for a morning trail ride at Salamander Resort and Spa in Middleburg, Virginia. And despite his edgy hairdo, Odin is calm and wellbehaved as our group of four riders (and two guides) makes its way under towering trees, up gentle inclines and along a rustic stone fence. "That's been here since before the Civil War, and it probably took five years to build," explains one of the guides.

A HORSE, OF COURSE

We're walking our steeds around 340 acres in Middleburg, the heart of Virginia horse country. The town and its hilly, bucolic environs still host fox hunts (the red-tailed critters usually survive, FYI) and spirited steeplechase races. (The International Gold Cup takes place October 28 at nearby Great Meadow.) I've made the 50-mile drive from D.C. with my equine-averse spouse, Callan, both to saddle up and to visit the circa-1787 town founded by Revo-Iutionary War hero John Leven Powell.

Post ride, I pat Odin farewell; he's muzzle down in a pail of hay in Salamander's gableroofed barn. I'm a bit wobbly from an hour in the saddle, so I head to the spa for a massage and some hot-tub time. After I enjoy a heated soak under a blue-lit dome, therapist Allison goes to work on my sore, er, flanks with a heated bamboo roller. "The roller isn't specific to any culture," she says. "But we find our riders really like it." She called me a rider! I feel refreshed as I join Callan for some pre-lunch wine sampling.

These days, the countryside surrounding Middleburg wins as many kudos for wine as it does for riding trails. "Loudoun County is pastoral and kind of like rural France, with fields of horses and rolling green hills," says my friend and wine wholesaler Andrew Stover, a longtime fan of local sips. "It also happens to be good for growing grapes."

With this in mind, we sample reds in the tasting room at nearby Boxwood Estate Winery. "It's like a chapel to grapes," says Callan, bellied up to the circular bar. We sip Bordeaux-style reds like full-bodied Topiary with its blackberry notes. A bit further afield at Greenhill Winery, we sit on the shaded porch with views of the vines and taste the excellent whites: an apricot-y Viognier and a velvety sparkling blanc de blanc.

Minus the cars, Middleburg's main drag, Washington Street, could star in a historic drama: It's all redbrick sidewalks, 18th- and 19th-century buildings and indie retailers. Two Civil War skirmishes took place in town limits in 1863, and the burg later earned a rep as the horse and hunt capital of the U.S.

The latter vibe permeates our late lunch stop, the Red Fox Inn & Tavern. At the circa-1728 fieldstone edifice, we try creamy Virginia peanut soup and fried green tomato eggs Benedict. We're in historic company: Lore says that George Washington supped here, as did Confederate General J.E.B. Stuart and equestrienne First Lady Jackie Kennedy. "I didn't have to get up on a horse or win a battle to eat here, though," says Callan, sipping a glass of wine that we tasted earlier at Greenhill.

Very full and a little sleepy, we head to the National Sporting Library & Museum a few blocks off the main drag. The museum features both contemporary and historic hunting, fishing and riding art, including a dramatic modern metal horse head in the lobby and early 19th-century English etchings upstairs of Mr. Darcy clones and their hounds hunting pheasants.

Afterwards, we wander back to Washington Street, populated with antiques stores, women's clothing boutiques and tempters like Middleburg's Finest Chocolates, which lures us with its old-timey glass cases packed with locally made bonbons. We grab a couple of Virginia Dainties, traditional milk chocolate buttercreams rolled in—what else?—peanuts grown in state.

Cal and I are also charmed by Country Classics, a clothing store that makes traditional English horse fashions seem hip. Think hacking jackets, Liberty of Londonprint dresses and riding pants. "With these kind of clothes, there's a reason for how everything is made, from where a button is to whether pants have pleats," says shop co-owner Roderick Rigden. I know what I'm wearing for my next date with Odin.

We're addicted to outdoor fitness classes

Local influencers weigh in on where to feed their latest obsessions. This month? They're hungry for outdoor fitness classes. Here's where they go to get their fill.

Boating in DC

Fall makes me think about wearing Henley sweaters and rowing on the river. I love water sports and have always wanted to learn how to row. This outfit offers lessons for newbies like me and coaching for more experienced rowers.

Be Your Best Daily

I have the best personal trainer, Kuti Mack. I haven't done the same workout in four years, and we exercise all over the place. He can invent a fun and effective workout in a stairwell, or with a park bench, but my favorite is when he brings out the boxing gloves! -Kate Goodall, CEO, Halcyon,

November Project This class, every

Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 6:30 a.m., is a sweat-inducing series of sprints, push-ups, stair climbs and burpees. On Wednesdays it's held at the Lincoln Memorial. New faces are always welcome. The best part: It's completely free. -Tim Ebner, food and travel writer,

Liaison Capitol Hill Hotel

There are so many reasons to love the morning poolside yoga: the view, the serenity, and the proximity to Art & Soul's scrumptious Chicken and Waffles downstairs after you've been active enough to deserve it.
